

As the Grants Program Manager for the Cancer Biomarkers Research Group of the National Cancer Institute, Michelle is both diligent and committed to her profession. Although her love for science and healthcare runs deep, Michelle's different life experiences have set her out on a new journey to help her community.

At 19 years old, Michelle became a mother to twins, Kennard and Kiley Jae. In an effort to avoid becoming a statistic, Michelle continued her education and recently completed her Master's degree in Healthcare Administration at the University of Maryland.

Michelle has worked hard with her brand, Miss Fortune, Your S.H.E.R.O. and is excited to have officially launched this past June. The mission is to Strategically Help Everyone Reach Opportunity, and essentially live a better life. Her current services include credit restoration and providing travel opportunities. More so, she wants to use her platform to encourage and help teen moms understand the importance of perseverance. She plans to share her story with others in hopes to inspire these moms to be strong, confident and persistent.

Her Financially Free & Focused Seminar was the first of many events for 2018 that Michelle has planned, and hopes to have you in attendance!

Michelle currently lives in Laurel, MD with her 5-year-old twins. She is excited about her new endeavors, and is looking forward to networking with others. She hopes to use her services and Strategically Help Everyone Reach Opportunity!
